“ From saving me from trees to making sure I was fully stocked on olives or parmesan cheese. Jerry was always a home away from home (yes across the street counts) he was a sounding board when my teenage world was a mess. Jerry was my father figure, and my friend. I'm sorry we lost touch but I have never stopped thinking about you! Fly high Jerry!

“ Jerry was our favorite Rocky Mountain man, cut-up, and philosopher. He taught us how to rappel down a cliff and slice cheese when we forgot our knife. He had a habit of playing devil’s advocate with his mother, challenging her conservative views, even though he secretly agreed with her. It was fun watching the two of them “debate”. Jerry claimed that if you weren’t living on the edge, you were taking up too much room. He tour-guided us through some unbelievably beautiful country in his beloved Colorado, making precious memories for our family. I’m glad he never made good on his abrupt announcement one day that he thought he would become a Buddhist. Like some of his other big plans, that was fleeting. He seemed to want to experience everything he could fit into his life. His stroke laid him low for awhile and his outlook changed but the first time he spoke to us after regaining speech, I sensed he really was still Jerry the humorist. What a privilege to be called his sister-in-law.

*Wishing I could be with you all this week,
Pam Hounshell*
